
(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)
is said to act under direct instruction from Roscoe Conkling, Tom Wheeler, or Utica, New York, says: "I know Roscoe Conkling well, and I know he would give ten years of his life to beat Arthur in this fight."

FRED DOUGLASS
Was the centre of an admiring crowd in the Sherman House to-night, and he said Blaine came so near being successful twice before that this fact alone created a great deal of public sympathy in his favor. Many Republicans who are not in accord with him, yet consider that he has been slaughtered, and they would like to see him triumphant. "The fellow doesn't want a 'putty' man for President. They want now to see a man who, when he puts up his great right hand to swear to the Constitution, will have no mental reservation. A President who will regard all the amendments to the Constitution as part of the Constitution. He did not believe the reports that sixty colored delegates would vote for Blaine on the first ballot. Blaine knew very well that they could not hold the Southern States in line, and for this he is himself responsible. His action in the Force bill led to this, and Logan would undoubtedly be the next choice of the Southern delegates who are now for Blaine. Many of the federal officeholders will no doubt regard it as a point of honor to vote for Arthur. He thought John Sherman and Senator Edmunds, as he said he liked to call him, were not understood by the people, who said they were cold and unapproachable. No man attended to his official parliamentary duties with more conspicuous fidelity than Senator Edmunds. He had no time or perhaps inclination for political affiliations. He promised no medals, positions, or offices or consulships to anybody. This is where, in his view, the charges of coldness brought against him come in. John Sherman, in his judgment, towered intellectually above the majority of the candidates. It would be really impossible to venture to predict the turn of events at the Convention. Personally he had a very strong presentiment that Blaine would be nominated. He also believed that if nominated he would be elected.

Selection of Clayton Criticized.
New York, June 4.—The Times-to-day says: The first outcome, a most significant portent of the alliance of the Blaine and Logan forces, was the choice of Clayton as Temporary Chairman. This gentleman is entirely worthy of the coalition by which he was chosen. Having selected the Star-route contractor, Edkins, as the manager of his campaign, Mr. Blaine can, of course, have no objection to the choice of the second Dorsey as temporary chairman of the convention. That the choice of Clayton is interlarded with the decent Republicans is evident, and there may be some wisdom in the prediction of an Arthur delegate that the "moral effect" of such a selection would injure Blaine's cause. The highly magnified Blaine men from the Eastern States, have, of course, long since lost their sense, but among the delegates of such states as Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, this extending the right of fellowship to the star route thieves ought to have some effect.

Interview With Blaine.
PHILADELPHIA, June 4.—The train on which Mr. Blaine was en route for Augusta, Maine, reached this city at 8 o'clock last evening. Mr. Blaine alighted and paced the platform with his daughter. The single newspaper reporter in the station promptly accosted the statesman. "I am bound for the family homestead," said Mr. Blaine, "where I shall spend the summer, and I have all of my family with me except my son Walker, who is detained in Washington on business, and Edmons, who is in Chicago." A veteran conductor of the road slipped up and, exending his hand, asked: "Have I the honor of addressing Mr. Blaine?" "I am Mr. Blaine."

"Then I want to shake hands with you." "I am always very glad to shake hands with any one who deigns to extend this expression of good will toward me," replied Mr. Blaine.

The conductor, after a hearty shake, asked permission to introduce his trainman, which was humorously accorded, and Mr. Blaine, evidently fearing that his presence would hinder the trainman, dismissed them with thanks for their well wishes. A railway came along, and Mr. Blaine alighted and selected the New York Post. He hastily scanned the head-lines over the convention news, and then said to the reporter:

"I have formed no judgment about the result at Chicago. I am absolutely content to await and abide by the convention's action."

With this Mr. Blaine re-entered the car, and, seating himself in the midst of his family, proceeded to chat gaily and unceremoniously. Among the passengers in the same car were two colored couples, traveling in exactly the same style as the Plumed Knight.

PASSING THROUGH JERSEY.
New York, June 4.—Mr. Blaine got to Jersey City at 10:15 last night. A young man with a natty beard and a silk umbrella climbed up to the car, deferentially lifted his tie to the candidate and said:

"Old Omelaga is solid for you, Mr. Blaine. Old Salt is strong for you. I know it for a fact, because I'm his son." The retired statesman extended his hand and a smile brightened up his somewhat pale face. He declined to talk on his chances. He reaches Augusta at 9:15 to-day.

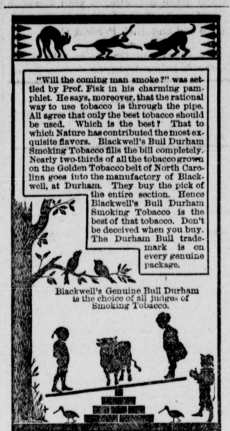

SHOCKING DISCOVERY.
Bodies of a Woman and Five Children Found in a Nuttified Condition.
PLEASANTON, Kan., June 4.—A report reaching here that two children were drowned in Sugar Creek, a coroner's jury repaired to the scene. They found a wagon, one horse, and a set of harness, excepting the harness lying beside the wagon was the body of a girl 16 years old, with her head severed from her body. The stream was near and the bodies of two children were found. A girl aged about 11 and a boy about 6. The girl's skull had been crushed with an ax, and the boy's throat cut, and the bodies of the children were thrown into the creek. In a neighboring thicket the mutilated body of a woman, apparently the mother of the children, was found. The side of her head had been beaten in and her throat cut. The body was hidden under brush and logs. A man accompanied by the woman and children was in town last week but nothing has been discovered as to the identity of the party.
